Regional women in Western Australia face housing crisis

New research reveals nearly one in ten women living in regional parts of Western Australia has been homeless in the past five years.

YWCA National Housing surveyed 1039 women living on low to moderate incomesⁱ across regional Australia to determine their access to safe, affordable housing.

The research found 9 per cent of women living in regional Western Australiaⁱⁱ reported having been homeless in the past five years and 16 per cent knew at least one woman who was currently homeless.

YWCA National Housing and Property Development Director Jan Berriman said the Women's Housing Needs in Regional Australia report revealed a higher homelessness rate than previous studies and statistics because many women hid their living circumstances from others.

“One quarter of women who had been homeless, either in the past five years or currently, did not share their situation with any family member or friend, reflecting the likelihood of a much higher rate of homelessness than previously understood,” Ms Berriman said.

“This is the first national study of women’s access to housing outside the nation’s capital cities and it clearly shows an urgent need for more safe, secure and affordable accommodation.”

NSW had the highest rate of women who had experienced homelessness in the past five years (17 per cent) and South Australia had the lowest (8 per cent). The national average was 12 per cent.

The report found many women sacrificed daily essentials to meet their housing payments with 30 per cent reporting they went without meals in the past year and 44 per cent refraining from cooling or heating their homes.

Ms Berriman said the numbers of women experiencing homelessness were expected to increase in the aftermath of bushfires, droughts and pandemics like COVID-19 because housing and jobs could be lost and rates of domestic and family violence were likely to increase.

“In regional areas, the impacts are even more severe because social services and supports are limited and strained to start with,” she said.

“Domestic and family violence is the leading cause of homelessness in Australia, and low-income women in the regions are even more likely to experience domestic violence than women who live in capital cities or who have high incomes.

“We need to urgently double and diversify affordable housing options in the regions or face a tsunami of homeless women and children.”

Ms Berriman said the solution lay in finding innovative, commercially sustainable and affordable housing options.

“YWCA National Housing has pioneered some innovative solutions that have involved partnerships with private operators and build-to-rent projects that provide eligible tenants with options to buy,” she said.

“But this research demonstrates we need to innovate on a much larger scale to meet demand.

“Government, philanthropic, corporate and community organisations need to come together to create new ways to increase the supply of social and affordable housing options and to boost housing support services in every state and territory across the country.”

This research was partially funded by the Commonwealth Department of Industry, Innovation and Science through the Building Better Regions Fund Community Investments Stream Round 3.

About YWCA National Housing

YWCA National Housing is the only national women’s housing provider in Australia. We currently provide over 150,000 nights of affordable accommodation to women through our owned and operated properties in Victoria, Queensland and Northern Territory.

YWCA National Housing believe the provision of safe, secure and affordable accommodation is a foundation for empowering women to lead a fulfilled life. We provide and advocate for improved access to safe, secure and affordable housing for low income Australians, particularly women and their children.

About YWCA Australia

YWCA Australia is a leading intersectional feminist organisation focused on improving gender equality for women, young women and girls. For 140 years, we have challenged the systems, structures and policies that act as barriers to women, especially young women, achieving their full potential.

Our high-impact evidence-based programs and services are inclusive of all women and offer support with housing, homelessness, safety, wellbeing and leadership. We aim to positively impact the lives of more than two million women, young women and girls by the end of 2023.
